I am considering adding further solar PV to my house. Whether I get sufficient panels and/or battery to go off grid or use the grid as the storage depends on what the new feed-in tariff and network charge is going to be to replace the Legacy Tariff.

I want the best outcome for climate change, as I see this as an enormous detriment coming for younger people in many sorts of ways. I am prepared to make some economic sacrifice in the short term but only if it contributes to a pricing structure that encourages others to install more renewables. If the pricing structure does not encourage new solar with a good feed-in tariff and reasonable network chargesubmission, I will go the whole hog and get enough panels and battery capacity to go off the grid.
